The victim, Wayne Pasik, later identified as the owner of the residence, was restraining the defendant, Clayton Hyslop on the ground. Officers immediately intervened, separating the individuals and taking control of the situation. The defendant was then placed into handcuffs. Upon securing the defendant, officers observed a black collapsable baton on the ground near where the altercation had taken place. When questioned about the baton, both the victim and the female involved stated that it was not in the house prior to the defendant's arrival, leading Officers to believe that the defendant was the one who brought the baton into the residence. The defendant denied bringing the baton into the house, despite the presence of it at the scene. However, the defendant's wife stated that he is known to possess and carry weapons of that type, further suggesting that the baton belonged to him. The defendant was then read his Miranda Rights and voluntarily stated that he had discovered his wife, Katherine Hyslop, was having an affair with the homeowner, the victim in this case. The defendant admitted he came into the residence to confront his wife regarding this situation. He further stated that upon arrival at the residence, he knocked on the door and heard someone say "hello," which prompted him to enter the residence uninvited. Once inside, the defendant was met by the victim, and a physical altercation immediately ensued between them. He stated that he found out where the victim lived through phone records and "research."

The victim provided a sworn statement indicating that at approximately 2330 hours, the defendant's wife called him, pleading to come to his house because she and the defendant were having a verbal argument at their own residence. Shortly thereafter, the wife of the defendant arrived at the victim's home, and they were lying in bed watching television. The victim further stated that he does not lock his front door and that at some point, approximately 10 minutes after the female arrived, he heard his front door open without a knock. He stated that he did not invite anyone else to come to his residence and that he was not expecting anyone to come. The victim saw the defendant walk into his bedroom, at which point the defendant began pushing and shoving him, screaming about the relationship between the victim and his wife. During the altercation, the defendant struck the victim in the face, causing an open wound on the nose. The victim stated that he then subdued the defendant and held him down until Officers arrived.

The defendant's wife, Katherine, corroborated the victim's account of events in a sworn statement. She stated that earlier in the evening, the defendant, whom she lives with, entered her room irate and confronted her about her relationship with the victim. Fearing for her safety, she called the victim and asked if she could come over to his house. She left the residence and went to the victim's home. Once there, she confirmed the sequence of events described by the victim, including the defendant entering the house uninvited and initiating a physical altercation.

Based on the above facts, probable cause exists to charge Clayton Hyslop with burglary to a dwelling/structure with assault or battery per F.S.S. 810.02 (2A).
